Concept Note:

There has been an upsurge in climate-induced hazards to human beings and their ecosystem. The climate-induced hazards threaten human life and property. The global community is facing considerable threats from climate change, and incurring considerable costs to cope with the climate impacts. For instance, rise in sea level will require expensive relocation and rebuilding exercises. In holistic term, climate change has had substantial effects on sustainable development. Climate change calls for new approaches to sustainable development that take into account complex interactions between climate, social and ecological systems. This has necessitated an urgent response to support climate change mitigation policies and its adaptation globally.

In this backdrop, the purpose of this seminar is to discuss and deliberate holistically issues related to climate change mitigation, adaptation and sustainable development in global and national context.
