Exploitation of Earth's natural resources is presently a necessary condition of human existence. However, the faster economic growth with higher levels of consumption in developed countries and aspirations of developing countries to reach equivalent levels of growth are continuing to harm the Planet's environment. India has emerged as one of the fastest growing economies in the world. India will continue its process of rapid industrialization and urbanization and a higher phenomenon of economic development in the approaching decades. This is a cause of rejoice for the economy. But the rapid economic growth of the economy has posed many difficulties and challenges. The challenges are in the form of rising consumption and demand for energy, increase in the greenhouse gas emissions, and constraints on critical natural resources such as land, water, and biodiversity harboured by them. India needs to find a way to ensure that the development does not take place at the cost of the environment. That is, the development should take place in such a way such that the environmental degradation and loss be also taken into account. To address this growing challenge, a new development paradigm is needed. Economic growth should take place in manner such that the needs and opportunities of the future generations are not compromised.

Sustainable development is a key idea that provides a right answer to the question as how the humankind co-exists with the earth in a peaceful manner. Sustainable development has become a very important notion and offers a very broad definition of development, linking the ecological services and quality of life with the economic growth. Keeping this in mind, the Department of Economics, Jamia Milia Islamia is organizing a seminar to address the issues relating to the environment its challenges, environment friendly technologies, and sustainable development in the context of the Indian Economy.
