Egypt

Finding

This Study has taken a general framework of the concerned region taking into concern history and the evolution of the political system, culture, and social structure. It will also provide a detailed framework of how civil-Military relations and democratization in the Arab world have been understood and how they have been theorized in the context of the Arab World. This study also makes a case of nationalist movements, the influence of the West, modernization, and Islamist assertion. Some of them have criticized the narratives which blame religion and culture for the lack of democratization and the prevalence of the so-called entrenched social and cultural backwardness in the Arab World by glossing over some of the tangible democratization processes in Muslim countries that have attained a certain level of democratization without denouncing their religious roots including like Turkey and Indonesia. This work contributes to our understanding of how Post-uprising has witnessed an even more powerful 'deep state' the fusion of military and bureaucratic systems in Egypt which in turn created conditions for the social, political, and economic chaos in Egypt. Also, the United States and certain Gulf countries played an important role in removing Mohammad Morsi from power by silently providing funding for anti-Morsi activities.
